Paul Goble was a painter who retold old Lakota stories with vibrancy and mysticism. I used this as a literary compliment to the Native Americans unit in social studies for 5th grade. I have a collection of his books and the students all love them. He makes the stories come alive. We have a Paul Goble painting day at the end of the unit where students illustrate other legends in his style. This is a perfect gift for a teacher, a student of legends, art or a 4th-8th grade student. It also works well for teaching second language learners American legends and English.

"The Woman Who Lived with Wolves & Other Stories from the Tipi" is another classic amalgamation of traditional story and art by Caldecott medal winning author/illustrator Paul Goble. Featuring treasured tales from Cheyenne, Blackfoot, Arapaho, Pawnee, Kiowa, Ojibwa, Mandan, and Lakota traditions, this collection is stunningly enhanced with 45 color paintings of unusual imagination, channeling many Native traditions and designs. "The Woman Who Lived With Wolves" presents a dazzling array of traditional wisdom tales from many Native cultures, each with its particular message, hero or heroine. Each story teaches something important and valuable about the interrelatedness of animals, nature, and human beings. Each must seek to understand and respect the sacred threads that bind them in life together. There are many teaching tales from many Buffalo days tribes and nations. Here "The Woman Who Lived with Wolves" we are fortunate to be given a treasured look into a living past fraught with danger, hunger, hope and courage. "The Woman Who Lived with Wolves" is suitable for children ages 8 and up, as well as caring adults close to them.

All of Paul Goble's books are wonderful. Its a great read for children, that tells of history, myth and legend in a quite and beautiful way.
