Basic Plot (Without giving too much away besides the basic preface): Feeling that America is suffering from a major decline, an overly patriotic ex-Shield Agent, who is also a necromancer, resurrects all our nation's Dead Presidents in order to fix it. But the problem is the Dead Presidents' solution is to wipe the slate clean with the blood of the American people who they feel have forsaken its dream. S.H.I.E.L.D. dispatches Captain America to confront the issue and, once on scene, Cap confronts and defeats the late President Truman decapitating him via his vibranium shield. This becomes a public relations nightmare for both S.H.I.E.L.D. and the Avengers. So the question then becomes how do we deal with this pesky issue of these Dead Presidents without making either of ourselves look bad? And that's where the wild card that is Deadpool, a.k.a. 'The Review: This story's good. It's pretty first-time reader friendly and not boggled down by 20-30 years of continuity plagued by most Marvel titles. My favorite Deadpool run was Daniel Way's
